5 Shared features and working rules

The same collaboration record follows the work across the four portals.

Common features

- Role-based account access for influencers, brands, agency teams and administrators.
- Messages attached to a campaign or deal, with a history of the conversation.
- Pending-action summaries, deadlines, status updates and in-app activity notifications.
- A review workspace with video playback, content versions, timestamped notes and revision history.
- Product details, delivery addresses, tracking, receipt confirmation and issue history for product-linked deals.
- A visible breakdown of the agreement amount, platform fee, net compensation and settlement status.
- Mutual ratings and written reviews linked to completed collaborations.
- Desktop and mobile layouts, light and dark themes, and a guided introduction to the platform.

Collaboration types

- Paid video — content commissioned for an agreed fee.
- Barter — content in exchange for agreed products, with no monetary platform commission.
- Affiliate plus product — products supplied with agreed affiliate compensation recorded in the deal.
- UGC package — content made for a brand’s own channels or advertising.
- Additional formats configured by the owner.

How a collaboration moves

- Offer: The brand or agency sets the brief, compensation, due date, rights and revision allowance. The influencer accepts or declines.
- Funding and products: Paid work is funded before it starts. Where products are required, the influencer supplies an address and confirms receipt after shipping.
- Content: The influencer submits the work. The commissioning party reviews it, requests changes where needed and approves the agreed version.
- Completion: The influencer publishes or hands over the content as agreed. The brand or agency checks that the completion conditions have been met.
- Settlement: The payment is released or the barter exchange is marked complete. Both parties can then leave one review each.
- Problems: Eligible disputes go to the owner for a release or refund decision, with the supporting records available in the same deal.
